A General Theory of Machines. In the Comptes Rendus of the Paris Academy of Sciences M. Koenigs has In the Comptes Rendus of the Paris Academy of Sciences M. Koenigs has printed a sketch of a general theory of mechanisms. Every machine consists of a number of material bodies, resistances, joined together reciprocally, upon which natural forces act to produce a desired effect, and the effect may be either a state of rest or one of motion. The resisting bodies and their connections are the mechanism. Its effect is not known until we define the acting forces. The same machine will produce different effects according as different forces play upon it.

Machines are subject to three effects—static when the connections of the machine see changed. The latter effect is usually not considered, but it is essential to take it into account. A machine could not be built, in the first place, unless it was capable of dissociation. In some in the connection are the machine or all the processary.

not be built, in the first place, unless it was capable of dissociation. In some machines-locks, for instance—the parts are dissociated every time the apparatus operates. It is desirable to de sign most machines, however, so that the dissociative effects do not come into play during their operation.

Beware of the Cold Bath.

The cold bath in the morning is not so popular as it was formerly. There is much energy expended in the re action and just at the time of day when this energy is at its lowest ebb. Then, too, cold water has very little cleansing effect. Very hot water stimulates the nerves, which is the effect that we are seeking from the cold water, while it does not demand the energy of reaction of the latter. The duration of the morning bath should as short as possible-hardly longer than the mere application of the water to the skin, followed by a brisk rub-However, many prefer a cool sponge bath in the morning, and if this is followed by a warm glow and a feeling of well being it certainly is beneficial. Many people are not strong enough to react well. A hot bath at night is most cleansing and restful. General bathing must be regulated by individual peculiarities. - Emma E. Walker, M. D., in Ladies' Home Jour-

A Little Too Late.

The minister of a Scotch parish had a great wish that an old couple should become tectotalers, but they were in nowise eager to comply. After much pressing, however, they consented to try the experiment, but laying down as a condition that they should be allowed to keep a bottle of "Auld Kirk" for medicinal purposes.
